PROTECTION

If you regularly pay bills, shop, and log in to financial accounts online, Aeroquip Credit Union would like to remind you to carefully watch your spelling when typing in web addresses. Typosquatting, also known as URL hijacking, is currently trending and targets internet users who incorrectly type a web address in their browser (i.e. Google.com instead of Google.com). When users make this typographical error, they may be led to an alternative website designed and owned by a hacker.

More about Typosquatting:

- Hackers often create fake websites that imitate the look and feel of your intended destination, so you may not realize you're at a different site.
- Sometimes the fraudulent sites exist to sell products and services, but most often they are intended to steal your personal identifiable information, such as credit cards or passwords.
- These fake sites are dangerous because they could download malicious software to your device just by you visiting the site.
- Sometimes hackers employ phishing in order to get you to visit their fake website.

Tip of the day: Protect yourself against Typosquatters by bookmarking frequently visited websites and by paying extra attention to your spelling when typing web addresses.
